Witness Statement

Witness Information

Case Identifier: PizzaCaper

Name: Erika Mustermann

Role: Employee

Location: Amazon Go #IBF4

Address: 500 110th Ave NE, Bellevue, WA 98004

Date/Time: 10/22/25 9:47 AM

Statement

Look, I'm just going to be honest with you—I'm terrified right now. I'm the one who stocked that pizza this morning. Me. I was the one who carefully placed it in the display case with the edible gold and that ridiculous mozzarella unicorn on top. I remember doing it specifically because it was such a unique item, you know? I made sure it was positioned perfectly. I checked it twice because I wanted to make sure it looked good for customers.

And now it's gone. Just... gone. And I can't help but thinking this is somehow my fault, even though logically I know that doesn't make sense. But that's not how my brain is working right now. All I can think about is getting fired. Like, what if they think I lost it? What if they think I was careless? What if there's some procedure I was supposed to follow that I didn't know about?

When I realized it had disappeared, my stomach literally dropped. I walked past the display case around mid-morning to do a restock check, and the spot where I'd placed it so carefully this morning was just empty. Empty. I immediately started panicking. I looked around thinking maybe someone had moved it, or maybe it had fallen, or maybe—I don't know—literally anything that would explain where it was. But there was nothing.

And then the customers started asking about it. That's when things got really bad. People were coming up asking if we had any more in the back, if they could place an order, where their pre-orders were. And I had absolutely no answers for them. I felt my face getting hot, my hands started shaking a little bit. These customers were clearly disappointed and frustrated, and I'm just standing there unable to help them at all.

The worst part is I keep replaying this morning in my head. Did I forget to secure it somehow? Should I have done something differently? Was there a step in the process I missed? I honestly can't remember if there was supposed to be some kind of protective covering or if it needed to be locked up or something. I'm probably overthinking this, but what if I messed up something basic and that's why it disappeared?

My manager hasn't said anything to me yet, which somehow makes it worse. I keep waiting for them to pull me aside and ask me what happened. I've been nervously checking in on that display case every few minutes, like maybe it'll magically reappear if I look at it enough times. But it doesn't. It just stays empty.

I really need this job. I can't afford to lose it. And now I'm standing here knowing that somewhere along the way, between me stocking it this morning and now, something went terribly wrong. And even though I probably didn't do anything wrong, I feel like I'm the one who's going to take the blame for this. I'm trying to act normal around the other staff members, but I'm honestly just freaking out internally. What if they fire me? What if they think I'm irresponsible or careless? This pizza was my responsibility this morning, and now it's just... vanished.

I just hope they figure out what actually happened before anyone decides I'm the problem here.

Evidence Images