I'm honestly really upset right now, and I'm trying not to cry in the middle of this Amazon Go, but I'm struggling. I ordered that pizza—the one with the hand-sculpted mozzarella unicorn sitting right on top of it—specifically for my daughter's birthday today. Today. Her birthday party is in three hours. Three hours. And I ordered this pizza as a surprise because she's been obsessed with unicorns lately, and I thought it would be the perfect, most memorable gift. Something special and unique that she'd never forget.

This wasn't just some regular pizza off the shelf, either. This was a custom order. I worked with one of the chefs here to design it specifically for my daughter. We talked about what would make it perfect for her. I described what I wanted, and they brought my vision to life. It was absolutely magnificent—truly a work of art.

The pizza itself was perfectly crafted with a beautiful golden-brown crust topped with melted cheese and pepperoni. But what really made it special was the hand-sculpted mozzarella unicorn the chef created and placed proudly on top. The chef had sculpted this gorgeous unicorn figurine entirely from fresh mozzarella with such incredible detail—she has the most delicate features, with a spiraled horn, flowing mane, adorable pointed ears, and the sweetest smiling expression on her face. The unicorn was dressed in what looked like a little mozzarella outfit, and her proportions were absolutely perfect. She looked magical, like she was guarding this pizza just for my daughter. The artist even hand-painted some delicate details to bring her to life.

The contrast was stunning too—the pure white mozzarella of the unicorn against the golden-brown pizza base, the cheerful red pepperoni scattered across the cheese. It was the kind of thing you'd want to photograph before you even ate it. I had already planned to take a picture of it with my daughter before we cut into it—that was going to be part of the memory, you know? The moment she saw it for the first time.

I placed the custom order, paid for it in full, and the confirmation said it would be ready for pickup by noon. The chef promised me it would be absolutely perfect. They assured me they'd take great care with it because they understood it was a special occasion. I was so excited about it. I kept imagining her face when she saw it. I could picture her eyes lighting up, her laughing, taking a million photos to show her friends. Everyone at the party would be talking about how incredible it looked. It was going to be the centerpiece of the whole celebration. It was going to be unforgettable.

But when I got here about an hour ago to pick it up, the employee told me it was missing. Missing. Just gone. Like, how does a custom pizza with a hand-sculpted mozzarella unicorn just disappear? A pizza that was specifically made for my daughter, that a chef spent time and care creating, that I paid good money for—it's not here. I have the receipt right here on my phone. I can show you the photos I took of the design mockup we created together. But the actual pizza? Gone.

And apparently—and this is what's making me even more upset—it was the only one. The one and only special custom pizza they made with that particular mozzarella unicorn creation. They don't have another one. They can't remake it exactly the same way. There's no backup. Nothing. Do you understand what that means? I can't just wait for them to make another one because this was a custom order. This was unique to my daughter's birthday. There's no Plan B. This was it. This was the only pizza designed specifically for my daughter's celebration, and it's vanished.

And now they're telling me they don't know what happened to it. They can't find it anywhere. They don't have any explanation. They're basically just shrugging and acting like this is some kind of mystery that nobody can solve. Well, it's not a mystery to me—it's a catastrophe. It's my daughter's birthday in three hours, and I don't have the custom pizza I paid for. I don't have that magnificent, beautiful, one-of-a-kind pizza with the hand-sculpted mozzarella unicorn that was supposed to make her day special. And there's no way to get another one exactly like it.

I asked about getting a refund, and they said they'd have to check with a manager, which means I'm going to be standing here wasting precious time while my daughter is waiting at home, probably getting ready, probably excited, probably asking when I'll be back with the surprise. Every minute I'm standing here is a minute I'm not spending trying to figure out what to do. I told the staff member that the party is in three hours, that this was a custom order made specifically for my daughter, that it was supposed to be magnificent and beautiful and unforgettable, and that it was the only one they made. They just looked at me sympathetically like that somehow makes up for the fact that this extraordinary pizza is gone and I'm running out of time.

This is so frustrating. I specifically came here because they offered custom orders. I trusted them with my vision for my daughter's special day. I worked with their chef to create something truly special. And now it's disappeared, and I have three hours to panic about it.

Can someone please just help me right now? Can someone please tell me what happened to my custom pizza? To the magnificent pizza that was designed specifically for my daughter's birthday? To the only one they made?
